Burlington Luxury Hotels - The tasks of a hotel porter includes making sure that the guest of the hotel is able to receive precise services which will make their stay at the hotel much more relaxing. The responsibilities of the porter will differ considerably from hotel to hotel and to the region of the globe they work in. With all porter jobs, the key focus is to keep the customers as happy as possible so that they would return in the future.

In many large hotels, the porters mostly work outside of the hotel and the bellmen handle the inside responsibilities of the hotel. An outside porter is responsible to gather the patrons' baggage upon arrival and making sure that their items are brought to their rooms. When the guests are ready to leave, the porter gathers the luggage and loads it so that it is all set to go. Hotel porters also run errands on the customer's behalf. Like for instance, they could collect and drop off the dry cleaning, pickup sporting event or theatre tickets and call taxis and all that.

Sometimes, porters could also work as bellmen in smaller hotels. When this is the situation, they not just deal with the bags outside but also show the customers to their hotel rooms, act as a point of contact for any issues of the patron, as well as demonstrate the features of the room.

Bellmen are responsible for reporting any concerns with the hotel room to maintenance personnel and can also assist patrons in changing rooms if any of them seem not suitable for whatever reason. Bellmen also frequently run errands for the patrons. They often make reservations for their patrons with entertainment venues or restaurants. In addition, they could often provide recommendations for regional attractions, offer assistance and answer questions in any emergency situations.

During an emergency, the hotel porter would work to make sure that guests evacuate safely helping with the implementation of safety measures. Porters could help various hotel staff members with duties like moving furniture, organizing rooms and fulfilling guest requirements. In hotels that do not have a doorman, hotel porters normally hold the door open for patrons along with handle their luggage.

A hotel porter job could be extremely hard. A porter has to be professional, friendly, courteous and outgoing while at work. Moreover, they have to be able to work long shifts. Like for example, a hotel porter can work eight full hours without any chance to sit down. Regardless of how uncomfortable or tired a porter is, it is really essential that they still respond to customers in a polite and happy way.

Sometimes, porters may need to carry out a variety of tasks. Some of these tasks may seem unreasonable and the porter should make certain that they complete them without complaining. Unless working in a large hotel where porters have a ranking system, their salary tend to be low. When a ranking system is in place, the porters have an opportunity to advance to a higher pay scale. Porters receive tips for doing a task well and could often anticipate tips for providing great customer service.
