Burlington Hotels - The main difference between a hotel and what a resort offers is in regards to their location, the activities and amenities offered on-site and what services overall they offer. For instance, a resort is often more spread out over more land compared to most typical hotels. There are normally a lot more activities offered to the guests due to the extra space. Furthermore, resorts usually provide more guest discounts and on and off-site freebies. Though a hotel and resort seem to be the same, there are certain reasons why customers choose to stay at one rather than the other.

Resorts may have substantial amounts of property and extra space that could be used for swimming pools or golf courses. In general, the resort would have more room for its patrons. Often the property of a resort is close to or on some kind of natural surroundings, like for instance an oceanfront resort. Normally, hotels have just enough land for the parking lot and the building. Most hotels are located on a main thoroughfare as well, so that it is easy for guests who travel to pull in and find accommodation. Additionally, with hotels being centrally situated, hotel guests to have access to all of the activities in the area.

The kinds of amenities that each resort or hotel could vary widely since it is common for a hotel to support a fitness room or a pool. If there are any types of restaurant at all, a hotel might have a restaurant or small kitchen available, whereas a resort usually has at least 2 or more lounges or restaurants and room service. Such activities as a spa, a computer area, live music, golf and tennis and dancing are amongst the common activities that occur on a resort.

Another major difference between a resort and a hotel is how many freebies or discounts one can provide over another. Typically, a hotel provides Wi-Fi access, breakfast and a complimentary newspaper. Resorts on the other hand, offer all of that and normally a lot more. Frequently, resorts offer free airport shuttle service. Resorts normally have discounts offered for eateries off and on the premises and discounted tickets to nearby tourist attractions.

Resorts are normally at a vacation destination and not geared towards business travelers. Many who come to stay at a resort, do so for all the extras which the resort could provide. These individuals are usually looking for a place to relax, to escape and to get away from their busy lifestyles. Hotels are truly great places to provide relaxation for their guests, but people who stay within a hotel are usually just there for business meetings or business conferences.
